About Raha Faridi

Raha Faridi (born 1980) is an experimental artist, filmmaker, radio producer, activist and storyteller. She has worked on a variety of subjects, including anthropology, music, gender equality, environment, and culture since the early 2000s. In her interdisciplinary work she processes urban and intellectual themes in a serious yet playful manner. She has traveled around Iran for years documenting locals in search of music and life stories. The result was several experimental documentaries, a folklore music album and her latest ethnographical length documentary “Chicheka Lullaby”, which was crowdfunded through a successful Kickstarter campaign and after years of prohibitions has finally been screened in Iran cinema and some festivals around the world. Now she is working on another documentary which takes place partially in Tehran and partially in Berlin.
